

Story boards are created as the first step after the rough script is written to show the flow of the program. They are extremely rough, and often not animated, but merely a series of stills. Showing the flow of a story often can lead to finding faults quickly before money is spent developing an idea that will not work.