

Making a vehicle or model-such as car, truck, airplane, or spaceship-move, crash, or explode in real life is a major expense. Often human life is at risk, and the effect might not work properly, requiring a retake of the shot with a new vehicle. Creating these effects on a computer and overlaying them onto live backgrounds is an effective and economical way of creating effects at a much more reasonable cost.